

About us

INTERdisciplina, published by the Center for Interdisciplinary Research in Science and the Humanities, at the Mexico National Autonomous University (known by its Spanish initials CEIICH-UNAM), proposes to discuss knowledge of reality in its complexity from an integrated point of view. This peer-reviewed journal will publish, every four months, interdisciplinary studies on problems of high social impact, with a theme-centered approach.

Considering that the different conceptions of the integration and articulation of knowledge don't exclude, but rather complement each other, we will discuss the different approaches to interdisciplinary research, pursuing the additional objective of specifying its meaning in different contexts; furthermore, we will examine the theoretical-epistemological grounds and the methodological guidelines of this research strategy. Primarily, this new journal aims to enhance bridges between the exact and natural sciences, and humanities, including approaches to engineering and the arts.

In accordance with a plural vision, the unifying subject of this first issue embraces the different approaches to interdisciplinary teaching and research. To accomplish this aim periodically, we hope that those who are developing projects according to this perspective or carrying out studies on interdisciplinary work, feel inclined to contribute their experience to this journal and thus make it an important reference on the national and international scene in all matters concerning the process of articulation and integration of knowledge.

With the aim of promoting an integrated perspective, that involves authors contributions from many countries, we will also be publishing in Spanish some texts which have already appeared in languages other than Spanish or English, but which are relevant because they contain some special approach, described by representative authors.

INTERdisciplina will also be published in digital format, so that the articles will be available online, with free access, both in Spanish and in their original language (with the exception of previously published works, that will only be available in their Spanish version).

Within the framework of the major aims of CEIICH, that encompass the promotion of interdiscipline, this editorial project aspires to become the expression and moving force of critical thought, one of the central values of the Mexico National Autonomous University. ld
